Why Say YES to RECESS? Peer-reviewed research shows what common sense tells us: Recess boosts children's mental, physical, social-emotional and academic development — the very areas we all want to improve.

The problem How much recess Nevada children get depends on where they live — down to which school they're zoned for. Daily recess runs from 15 minutes at a Clark County school we called, to 30–55 across Douglas County, to 45 district-wide in Carson City. These totals don't count recess lost when children are kept in to finish classwork or for minor behavior issues, a practice the American Academy of Pediatrics says should never happen.

Low-income kids get less In Washoe County, only 3 of 26 Title I schools reached by phone said they give 45 minutes of recess, vs. 11 of 32 others.

More of the same isn't working Fewer than half Nevada's 3rd–8th graders scored proficient in reading, math or science — before the pandemic and 5 full years after.

"Won't this cut learning time?" No. At least 14 Washoe County elementary schools already give kids 45 minutes of recess during the school day, despite a day tied for shortest in the state. It takes scheduling, not a longer school day or new funding. In a 2018 study, K–2 students who got 45 minutes of recess were less off-task and more focused in class than those who got 30 — so class time counts for more.

Tennessee added 25 minutes of recess, and scores kept rising. In 2025, Tennessee passed a law to bar withholding and expand recess from 15 to 40 minutes during the school day, without lengthening the day and with a fiscal impact the legislature called "not significant." After its first year, elementary reading and math scores hit their highest levels in nearly a decade.

Current policy The state School Wellness Policy calls for 30 minutes of daily activity, which need not be recess, and bars withholding it as punishment — yet parents, teachers and students across Nevada report recess cut for classwork, test prep and whole-class punishment.

Let's take a swing at childhood obesity, poor proficiency and youth mental health — with no new funding.
